SYNOPSIS

A casual finding of a short film filmed in super eight in the summer of 1983, which portrays the life in community of creols and natives in the Chaco Salteño, aroused on the filmmaker the desire of knowing what has happened with those neighbors who lived in the river side of the Caraparí river, near to the border of Argentina and Bolivia.

Twenty eight years later and using the film as a reference, the filmmaker goes in search of those faces and sceneries.

The region of the Great American Chaco includes the north of Argentina and zones of Bolivia and Paraguay. It is the second major ecosystem of America after the Amazon, the big native forest of Argentina and the richest area in biodiversity. Also it is the area with the highest indexes of poverty in Argentina.

Land of original peoples from ancient times.
Towards end of 1800 and until middle of 1900 it was developed the so called Conquest of the Green Desert.
The "civilization" came with slaughters of the natives realized by the army.

At the same time it was funded the so called indigenous reductions. Almost at the same time religious missions arrived, and then sugar cane and wooden factories were using cheap workforce of Creoles and aborigines.

There was a flow of workers who came back and forth between three countries. During these long peregrinations that were realized astride or afoot it was established the first settlements and communities.

Pedro Méndez, son of a Creole and a Guaraní chiriguana who were living in Bolivia, in the 50's shaped together with his family and neighbors one of these communities of Creoles and natives. They were established on the banks of the river Caraparí, in the north of the province of Salta, almost in the border with Bolivia.

When we conceived "Playa Ancha-Caraparí" we set up to find out what had happened with those faces and landscapes. They were the base of the short film "Al Otro Lado de La Banda" filmed in 1983. We also wanted to learn about their cultures, beliefs and values.

Twenty-eight years later we saw the consequences of what had been reported by Mario in that documentary. Mario is the son of Pedro Méndez. He emigrated to Buenos Aires.

The lack of work and opportunities and the floodings of the river Caraparí, today contaminated, have depopulated Playa Ancha.

Of another side of the river a priest comes every Sunday for mass and the school of the Franciscan Mission is the only nearby possibility to study.

The sounds of the boxes and the bass-drums are no longer heard. We didn't find faces painted with the red of the urucú or the disguises and rituals to celebrate the harvest.

Those boys who look at us from the movie of 83, today don't remember the verses of the Martin Fierro or the verses that their father sang.

Nevertheless, we like to ask ourselves how much is there of the perseverance of Roxana to study? The daughter of the baker and the construction worker who observes us from a small ancient photo.

We also wander how much of that family ties the Méndez preserve today? Of that Pedro who beside loading bags of 70 kilos in the sugar cane factories, and worked the land, was taking care of his children, reading and singing them verses.

We put together Playa Ancha-Caraparí in several stages, between the Spring of 2009 and the Spring of 2011.

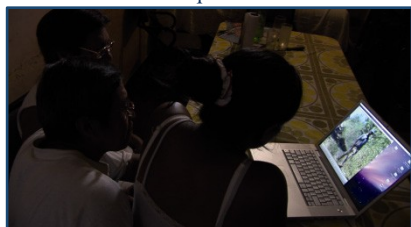

We enjoy making this movie, we hope you do too when watching it.
